Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

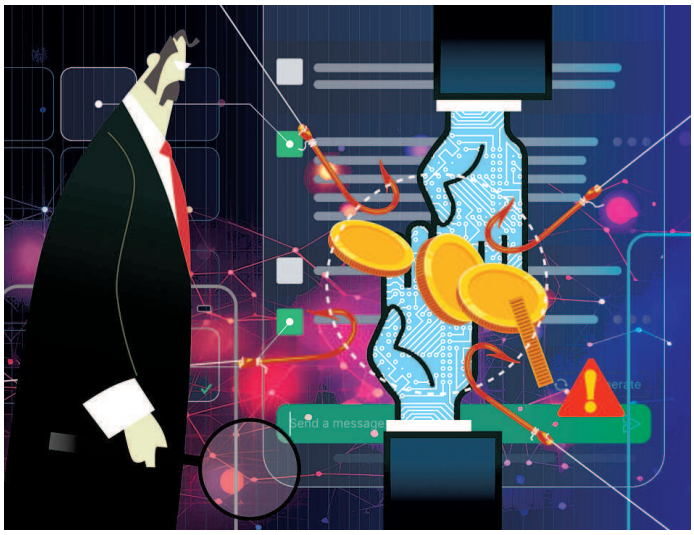

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

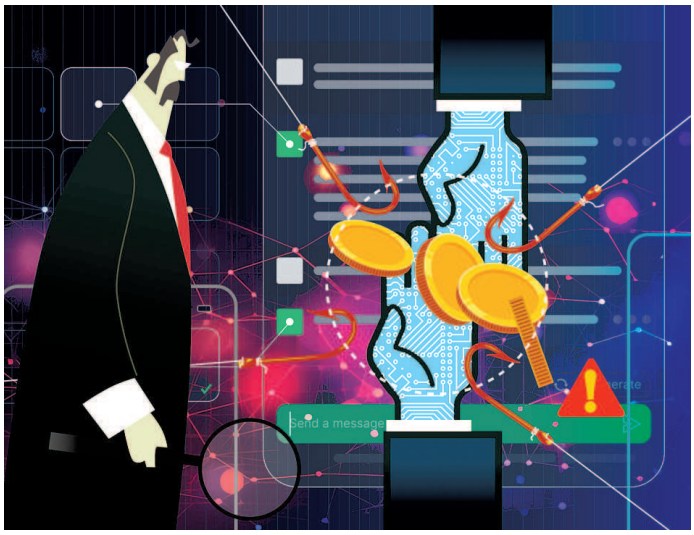

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

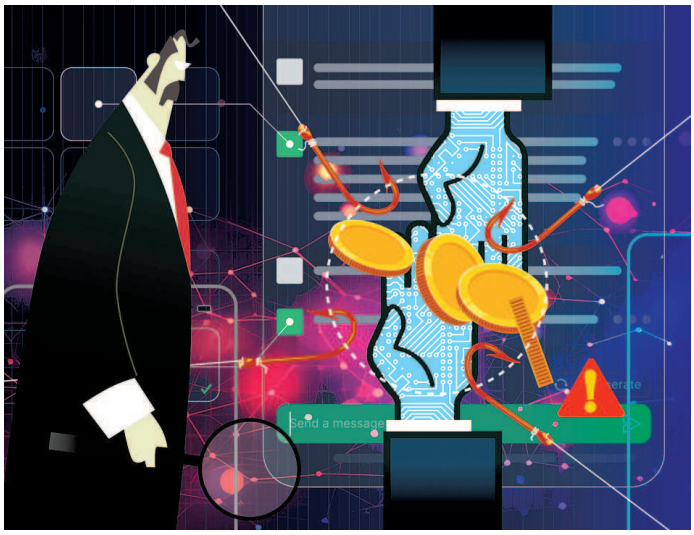

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

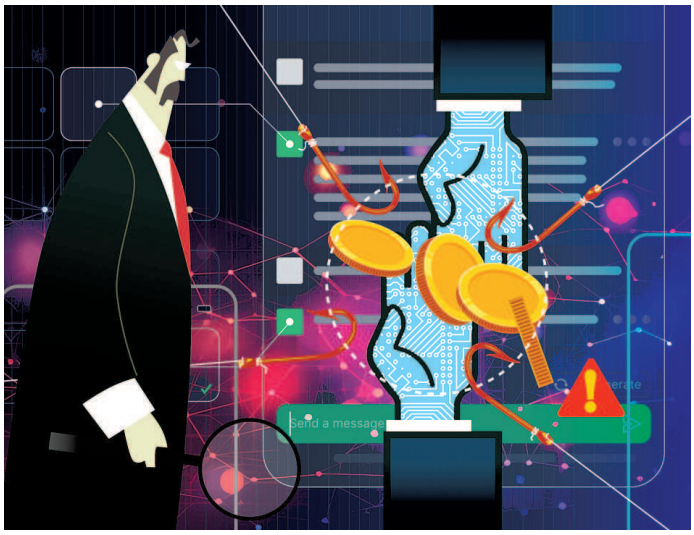

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

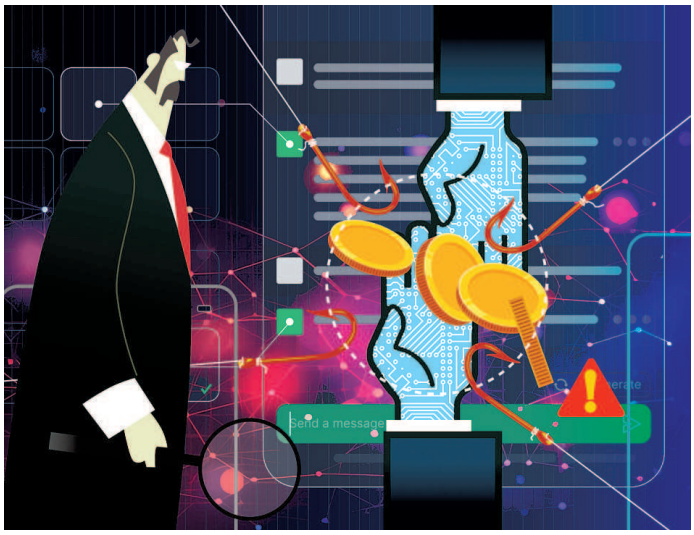

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

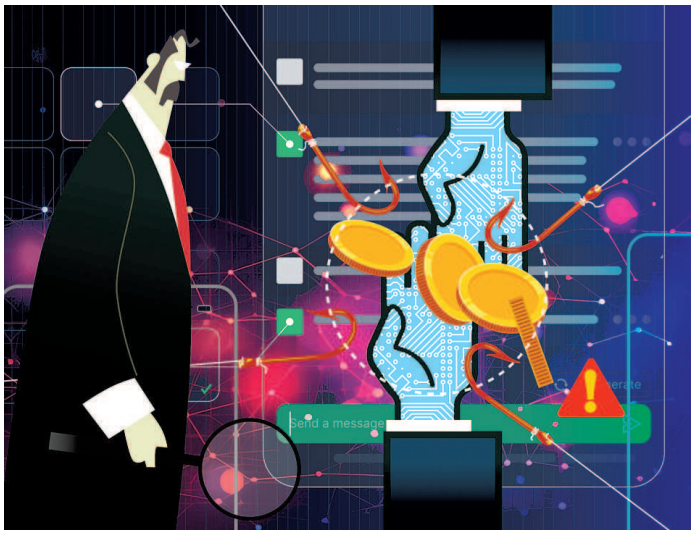

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

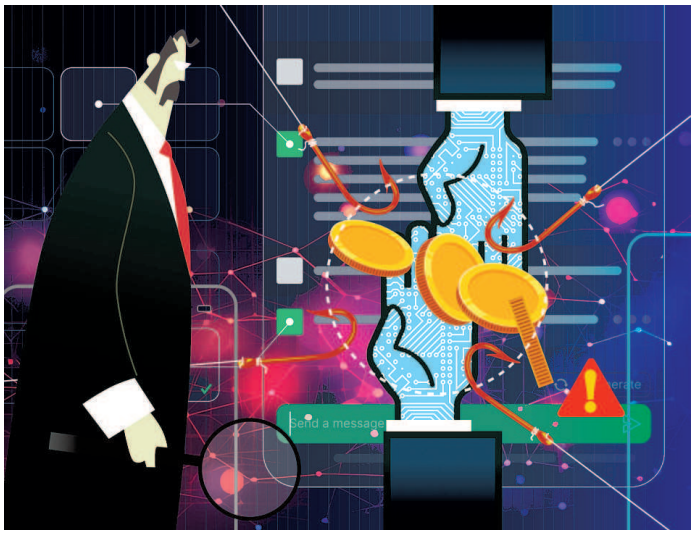

ILLUSTRATION: BINAY SINHA

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

c) The figures of the corresponding previous period/year have been regrouped wherever considered necessary, to make them comparable.
(*)The proportionate share of Associates/Joint Ventures in the net profits/losses has been recognised without elemination of profit in the Consolidated Financial Results. However, strict compliance as per Ind AS 28 and Ind As 12 could not be considered due to practical difficulties in identifying the transaction-wise cost which mandate the group's share of profit to be eleminated and the carrying value of the investment is adjusted by a like amount (referred as 'equity method') based on the un-audited Financial Statement of the Joint venture as available. The ascertainment of the amount of impact is presently not practible and necessary action may be taken at the year end.

Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

(*)The proportionate share of Associates/Joint Ventures in the net profits/losses has been recognised without elemination of profit in the Consolidated Financial Results. However, strict compliance as per Ind AS 28 and Ind As 12 could not be considered due to practical difficulties in identifying the transaction-wise cost which mandate the group's share of profit to be eleminated and the carrying value of the investment is adjusted by a like amount (referred as 'equity method') based on the un-audited Financial Statement of the Joint venture as available. The ascertainment of the amount of impact is presently not practible and necessary action may be taken at the year end.

Lessons from a heist

Hackers are patient. India's financial ecosystem cannot afford to be

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 10 November

On October 29, the world's largest crypto exchange, Binance, reported a security hack. Roughly $6.3 billion was drained from the exchange platform, more than four times the previous record. In February 2025, Bybit reported a heist of $1.5 billion. These incidents point to the dangers of cyber-attacks from not only nation-state-backed actors but also from gaps in the increasing use of artificial intelligence.

In India, the Binance raid would have brought back memories of the WazirX security incident. The platform in July 2024 suffered a major cyberattack and lost about $235 million.

While cyberattacks on crypto exchanges have increased in recent times, the Binance hack stands out for several reasons. For one, it is the largest heist so far. Two, Binance is one of the largest players as the liquidity provider behind futures trading, especially in India. Three, users will now increasingly evaluate platforms based on their wherewithal to deal with such hacks.

However, there has been no panic among users, probably because of the swiftness with which Binance took responsibility and assured users that their investments will not be impacted.

Binance in a post on X was quick to say that it will absorb the financial impact of the stolen funds. "We have already set aside more than 100 per cent of the funds required to cover the loss. As of October 31, 2026, 98 per cent of the impacted token assets have been replenished and are verifiable on our Proof of Reserves page. We are in the process of purchasing the outstanding, more illiquid assets," said the company.

In a subsequent comment, it said: "We have taken immediate action to contain the incident and strengthen the systems involved. The entry points identified as having been used in the attack have been closed. Systems touched in the attack path have been rebuilt or replaced. We have also implemented tighter device controls, enhanced wallet-service risk controls and expanded AI-based behavioural anomaly detection."

Binance also said that investigations highlighted the fact that the attack was sophisticated, and part of a multi-stage campaign. It was not an isolated breach or a simple phishing incident. The attackers combined a range of techniques, including social engineering by carrying out fake recruitment interviews, malicious software downloads, compromised internal AI tooling, endpoint compromise, and an advanced transaction-authorisation method.

The human factor

With social engineering, too, playing a role, it again brings forth the role of humans in such attacks.

An investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) pointed the Binance hack to North Korea's TraderTraitor, an alleged state-sponsored hacking collective.

This brings up the question as to how nation-state actors have succeeded in hacking systems in spite of strong key management. Jayant Dave, CISO, APAC, Check Point Software Technologies, a security expert who has seen at least seven major crypto thefts since 2024, said that the cryptography was not broken.

His findings were that five thefts/incidents began with a staff member's or supplier's device, token or session. Four ran through a supplier. In four, people approved the malicious transaction.

"State-linked groups are patient and well- funded, and they go where the defence is thinnest. Strong key management makes the vault hard to crack. So they target what is allowed to ask the vault to open: an engineer's laptop, a supplier's tool, an approval screen. The FBI attributes Binance to North Korea's TraderTraitor. US and Japanese authorities have warned for years about this group's lures aimed at engineers," he said in an email response to Business Standard.

Binance, in its post on the modus-operandi, said that social engineering was also part of the hack. The attackers used a fake job interview, an internal AI tool and a stolen deployment token to reach the internal wallet signing service, and started transactions outside the normal withdrawal process.

Saurabh Sharma, lead security researcher, Global Research and Analysis Team (GReAT), at Kaspersky agreed that in such cases attackers rarely break the keys. "They target the people and systems that are already trusted to use those keys. That is why these groups focus on engineers, developers and executives," he said.

In 2025, Kaspersky researchers detailed how BlueNoroff, a subgroup of Lazarus, a notorious cybercrime group linked to Pyongyang, used fake video calls and fake recruiters to compromise people working in the crypto industry. Even experienced specialists can be caught out, according to Kaspersky.

"Once inside a trusted device, attackers can work through the organisation's own approval processes. Technology alone cannot stop that if one compromised system is allowed to carry too much authority," he added.

State-linked groups are known for their patience: Kaspersky's analysis of Lazarus's Operation FlashHole found a campaign active since at least July 2025, with tools reworked over time.

"For investigators, it means the first compromised device is rarely the full story. Every access point has to be traced and closed before systems can be trusted again. Exact timelines, however, can only be confirmed once the investigation is complete," said Sharma.

Lessons for Indian players

Experts say Indian crypto-exchanges are already a target. Sharma said that The GhostCall and GhostHire campaigns that were uncovered by Kaspersky have targeted Web3 and cryptocurrency organisations in India since at least April 2025.

"The priority should be to make sure no single compromise can move funds. Developer and DevOps machines should be kept separate from systems that approve withdrawals, with independent checks for high-value transfers. This matters because valid accounts and trusted relationships remain leading entry points in the attacks our teams investigate," he said.

This is not just an India issue — every market faces this challenge. "Rules and audits confirm the right controls exist. The attackers behind these thefts test whether those controls hold under pressure. They are patient, and they work through people, devices and suppliers. That calls for testing alongside compliance," Dave said.

According to him, India has built one of the more structured frameworks in the region, and keeps strengthening it.

He points to the 2022 directions by CERT-In (Indian Computer Emergency Response Team) that require incidents to be reported within six hours and logs to be kept for 180 days. "Crypto service providers must keep KYC (know your customer) and transaction records for five years. FIU-IND (Financial Intelligence Unit-India) registration brings exchanges into the anti-money laundering framework. Its 2026 guidelines add a cyber security audit by a CERT-In-empanelled auditor. Fast reporting and good logs are exactly what investigators need after an incident like this," he said.

Though security experts have set out what needs to be done, it is finally the players who have to get serious on security.

"At CoinSwitch, we follow a risk-based approach to managing wallet exposure and withdrawals, with a focus on minimising potential vulnerabilities. This includes limiting exposure to online wallets, implementing layered access controls, transaction monitoring and withdrawal safeguards," said Balaji Srihari, vice president - business, India, CoinSwitch.

"We also emphasise segregation of duties and restricted access to critical systems to reduce insider-related risks. These controls are periodically reviewed and tested through security assessments and audits, helping us strengthen our preparedness against evolving external threats as well as potential internal risks," he added.

Nischal Shetty, founder of WazirX said security cannot be treated as a one-time exercise or a box to be ticked. It needs to be an ongoing priority, embedded into the way businesses operate.

"Cybersecurity is not a crypto-specific challenge; it is a financial ecosystem-wide concern. Traditional banking, fintech and cryptocurrency are all exposed to an increasingly sophisticated threat landscape. However, the scrutiny on the crypto industry is understandably higher, given the direct involvement of funds and the greater difficulty of recovering stolen assets compared to traditional banking. This makes security an especially critical responsibility for the industry."

Shetty added that with the rapid advancement of AI, WazirX is also seeing an expanding vulnerability landscape, with new risks emerging across software libraries, operating systems, browsers and server infrastructures that underpin modern products.

"This makes it increasingly important for companies to look beyond preventive security measures and have a plan in place for worst-case scenarios," he said.

Notes:

a) The above extract of standalone and consolidated financial results of the detailed format of Unaudited Financial Results for the Quarter ended 30th September, 2026 filed with the Stock Exchanges under Regulation 33 of the SEBI (Listing and Other Disclosure Requirements) Regulations, 2015 as amended. The full format of the Unaudited Financial Results for the Quarter ended 30th September, 2026 are available on the Company's website (www.webfilindia.com) and on the website of The Calcutta Stock Exchange Ltd. (www.cse-india.com).

b) The above results have been reviewed by the Audit Committee and approved by the Board of Directors of the Company at their meetings held on 10th November, 2026.

c) The figures of the corresponding previous period/year have been regrouped wherever considered necessary, to make them comparable.

(*)The proportionate share of Associates/Joint Ventures in the net profits/losses has been recognised without elemination of profit in the Consolidated Financial Results. However, strict compliance as per Ind AS 28 and Ind As 12 could not be considered due to practical difficulties in identifying the transaction-wise cost which mandate the group's share of profit to be eleminated and the carrying value of the investment is adjusted by a like amount (referred as 'equity method') based on the un-audited Financial Statement of the Joint venture as available. The ascertainment of the amount of impact is presently not practible and necessary action may be taken at the year end.

a) The above extract of standalone and consolidated financial results of the detailed format of Unaudited Financial Results for the Quarter ended 30th September, 2026 filed with the Stock Exchanges under Regulation 33 of the SEBI (Listing and Other Disclosure Requirements) Regulations, 2015 as amended. The full format of the Unaudited Financial Results for the Quarter ended 30th September, 2026 are available on the Company's website (www.webfilindia.com) and on the website of The Calcutta Stock Exchange Ltd. (www.cse-india.com).
b) The above results have been reviewed by the Audit Committee and approved by the Board of Directors of the Company at their meetings held on 10th November, 2026.
c) The figures of the corresponding previous period/year have been regrouped wherever considered necessary, to make them comparable.
(*)The proportionate share of Associates/Joint Ventures in the net profits/losses has been recognised without elemination of profit in the Consolidated Financial Results. However, strict compliance as per Ind AS 28 and Ind As 12 could not be considered due to practical difficulties in identifying the transaction-wise cost which mandate the group's share of profit to be eleminated and the carrying value of the investment is adjusted by a like amount (referred as 'equity method') based on the un-audited Financial Statement of the Joint venture as available. The ascertainment of the amount of impact is presently not practible and necessary action may be taken at the year end.

b) The above results have been reviewed by the Audit Committee and approved by the Board of Directors of the Company at their meetings held on 10th November, 2026.

c) The figures of the corresponding previous period/year have been regrouped wherever considered necessary, to make them comparable.

(*)The proportionate share of Associates/Joint Ventures in the net profits/losses has been recognised without elemination of profit in the Consolidated Financial Results. However, strict compliance as per Ind AS 28 and Ind As 12 could not be considered due to practical difficulties in identifying the transaction-wise cost which mandate the group's share of profit to be eleminated and the carrying value of the investment is adjusted by a like amount (referred as 'equity method') based on the un-audited Financial Statement of the Joint venture as available. The ascertainment of the amount of impact is presently not practible and necessary action may be taken at the year end.

கயானாவில் பாங்க் ஆப் பரோடாவின் புதிய தலைமை அலுவலகம், புதிய கிளை : ஜனாதிபதி முகமது இர்பான் அலி திறந்தார்

வங்கியின் வளர்ச்சி, செயல்பாடுகளில் நிர்வாக இயக்குனர் தேபதத்தா சந்த் பெருமிதம்

கயானா, நவ 11–

இந்தியாவின் சர்வதேச வங்கியான பேங்க் ஆஃப் பரோடா, கயானாவில் தனது புதிய தலைமை அலுவலகம் மற்றும் ஜார்ஜ் டவுன் கிளையை திறந்துள்ளது.

கயானா சுதந்திரம் அடைவதற்கு சுமார் இரண்டு மாதங்களுக்கு முன்பு, 1966 மார்ச் 31 அன்று, இந்த வங்கி கயானாவில் தனது செயல்பாடுகளைத் தொடங்கியது. 1999ல், அதன் உள்ளூர் செயல்பாடுகள், பேங்க் ஆஃப் பரோடா (கயானா) இன்க் என்ற முழு உரிமையுடைய துணை நிறுவனமாக மாற்றப்பட்டது. இன்று, இந்த வங்கி நாட்டில் இரண்டு கிளைகளை இயக்குகிறது. கயானாவில் செயல்படும் ஒரே இந்திய வங்கியாகவும் திகழ்கிறது.

புதிய கட்டிடம் மற்றும் பாரம்பரிய மையம் இரண்டையும் கயானா கூட்டுறவுக் குடியரசின் தலைவர் முகமது இர்ஃபான் அலி, நிர்வாக இயக்குநர் டாக்டர் தேபதத்தா சந்த் முன்னிலையில் திறந்து வைத்தார்.

பரோடா வங்கியின் தலைமைச் செயல் அதிகாரி, ஜனாதிபதி அலுவலகத்தில் நிதித்துறைக்கு பொறுப்பான மூத்த அமைச்சர் அஷ்னி சிங், கயானாவிற்கான இந்திய உயர் ஆணையர் சின்மாய் நாயக், ஜார்ஜ்டவுன் மேயர் ஆல்ஃபிரட் மென்டோர், வங்கியின் ஆளுநர் டாக்டர் கோவிந்த் கங்கா வங்கியின் (கயானா) தலைவர் நிஷாந்த் ரஞ்சன், இயக்குநர் சேகர் மோசஸ் மல்லம்பதி மற்றும் நிர்வாக இயக்குநர் மோஹித் பக்குனி ஆகியோர் இந்நிகழ்வில் கலந்து கொண்டனர்.

இந்நிகழ்வில் பேசிய நிர்வாக இயக்குநர் மற்றும் தலைமைச் செயல் அதிகாரி டாக்டர் தேபதத்தா சந்த், "கயானாவுடனான நமது உறவு அதன் சுதந்திரத்தை விடப் பழமையானது. நாங்கள் இந்த நாட்டுடன் இணைந்து வளர்ந்துள்ளோம், மேலும் அதன் பொருளாதார மற்றும் நிதிப் பயணத்தின் ஒரு பகுதியாகவும் இருந்துள்ளோம்" என்றார்.

கயானாவில் ஆழமான வேர்களைக் கொண்ட ஒரு இந்திய வங்கியாக, பேங்க் ஆஃப் பரோடா இந்த இரண்டு நட்பு நாடுகளையும் இணைக்கும் ஒரு நிதிப் பாலமாக இருப்பதில் பெருமை கொள்கிறது. கயானாவில் வங்கியின் செயல்பாடுகளை எடுத்துரைத்த டாக்டர் சந்த், அதன் வாடிக்கையாளர்கள் மற்றும் பரந்த சமூகத்தினரின் நம்பிக்கையையும் ஊக்கத்தையும் பாராட்டினார்.

500 மில்லியன் அமெரிக்க டாலர்

இந்த வங்கி, ஐந்து கண்டங்களில் உள்ள 15 நாடுகளில் பரவியுள்ள சுமார் 65,000 தொடர்பு மையங்கள் மூலமாகவும் , அனைத்து வங்கித் தயாரிப்புகளையும் சேவைகளையும் தடையின்றியும் சிரமமின்றியும் வழங்கும் அதன் பல்வேறு டிஜிட்டல் வங்கித் தளங்கள் மூலமாகவும், சுமார் 180 மில்லியனுக்கும் அதிகமான தனது உலகளாவிய வாடிக்கையாளர்களுக்குச் சேவை செய்கிறது.

மும்பை, நவ. 11–

ஈரான் உடனான போர் தற்காலிகமாக நிறுத்தப்பட்டுள்ளதாக அமெரிக்க அதிபர் டிரம்ப் அறிவித்துள்ளதையடுத்து, இந்திய பங்குச் சந்தைகள் இன்று உயர்வுடன் வர்த்தகமாகி வருகின்றன.
